

Alligator's Use of Cookies

1.1 Cookies and how we use them

Alligator uses cookies, i.e., small text files that are transmitted by a website server to your hard drive, to analyze the traffic on our websites.

The information analyzed may include the number of visits, the pages visited and traffic sources, all with the aim of improving the user experience for our visitors. We also use cookies in connection with our marketing materials to make our advertising as relevant as possible for our customers.

We place non-essential cookies on your device only if you have given your explicit consent. You can withdraw your consent at any time if you change your mind. As a visitor, you can set your own browser to allow cookies to be stored on your computer or not. You can also choose to delete any cookie file that has been placed on your computer at any time.

1.2 Cookies in use

Necessary cookies

Necessary cookies are used for our website to function. Those cookies cannot be deactivated and do not store personal data.

Cookie	Purpose	Service	Domain	Storage
Cookies_and_content_security_policy	Store consent	WordPress	WordPress.com	1 year

Performance cookies

Performance cookies allow us to keep count of numbers of visits to our website. Those cookies inform us on what pages are mostly used by visitors and tell us how the user navigates our website. All information about usage is aggregated and therefore also anonymized.

Pll_language	Store language settings	Polylang	Polylang.pro	1 year

Functional cookies

Functional cookies allow the website to provide improved functionality and a personalized experience. They can be activated by us, or third-party service providers used on our website. If you do not allow use of those cookies some or all of those services might not function. Third-party service providers might process your information, including personal data, whenever those cookies are activated.

Alligator uses plug-ins from Google Maps, YouTube, Quartr and on its website. Discover more information on those services in the links below.
